Jackson Pollock

(Cody, Wyoming, 1912 – New York, 1956) Pollock fut le représentant le plus important et le plus influent de l'expressionnisme abstrait. Il avait étudié auprès du régionaliste Thomas Hart Benton, et était également marié au peintre abstrait Lee Krasner (étudiante de Hans Hofmann). Il comptait parmi ses collègues Aschile Gorky, Willem de Kooning, Franz Kline, Robert Motherwell, et d'autres issus de l'école dite de New York. En 1947, il développa l'action painting ou, en termes moins précis, le dripping. Il s'intéressait à un processus de création et d'expression du moment, impliquant le moins de références possibles à la réalité visuelle. Abandonnant les pinceaux, le chevalet et la palette, il contrôlait lui-même les quantités de peinture qu'il faisait couler ou projetait sur une toile généralement très grande qu'il avait l'habitude d'étaler sur le sol. Bien que son obsession première fût l'expression de sa propre vie intérieure (subconscient) à travers son art, sa vie émotionnelle était sans conteste très instable, son approche du processus créatif et la plupart de ses oeuvres bouleversèrent de façon définitive l'évolution de l'art en Amérique.
